A Dollar A Day By David Venters

what can you buy for a dollar a day, maybe a chocolate bar or a can coke or maybe some other perishable items of food.

But what about a car, a holiday or anything else that means a lot to you and your family.

The answer may strike you as odd but a dollar a day can lead to a new house, a new car or financial freedom. It can also give you a helping hand to start a home business.

Let me explain. For the equivalent of a dollar a day you can see yourself on the road to eradicate your financial problems. Maybe to keep up with all your payments on your home and car as well as to afford nice holidays you have to sacrifice time so that you have to work longer to earn more.

However imagine using someone else's time and money and receiving a monthly residual income. maybe with this knowledge of a constant stream of money coming in you can spend more time with your family or be able to play golf during the week instead of at weekends.

At the beginning I asked you how much you could buy with a dollar, wouldn't you rather invest that dollar into something worthwhile.

If you belong to a two tiered affiliate program or multi level program marketing you can invest a dollar and get books tapes and leads to help you grow your business.

Now are you beginning to see what you can buy for a dollar a day, can you imagine if just two people from the leads you get for a dollar a day join your business and then each month you recruit two more. Can you also imagine what would happen if the people who join you in your business did the same and recruited two people a month into your downline

Imagine how many people you would have in your business, it would sky rocket.

So the answer to my original question of what can you buy for a dollar is business leads, business books and motivational tapes.

David Lee Venters is an Affiliate marketing consultant and has been for four years.

What Is Currency Trading?

By Alfred J. James

Currency trading is the largest market on the planet. It is estimated that in excess of US$2 trillion is traded every day. Compare this to the New York Stock Exchange's daily transactions of approximately US$50 billion, and you can see that the magnitude of the currency trading market exceeds all other equity markets in the world combined. The practice of currency trading is also commonly referred to as foreign exchange, Forex, or FX, for short.

All currency has a value relative to other currencies on the planet. Currency trading uses the purchase and sale of large quantities of currency to leverage the shifts in relative value into profit.

What is the FX market?

The FX market is different from other markets in some other key ways that are sure to raise eyebrows. Think that the EUR/USD is going to spiral downward? Feel free to short the pair at will. There is no uptick rule in FX as there is in stocks. There are also no limits on the size of your position (as there are in futures); so, in theory, you could sell $100 billion worth of currency if you had the capital to do it. If your biggest Japanese client, who also happens to golf with Toshihiko Fukui, the Governor of the Bank of Japan, told you on the golf course that BOJ is planning to raise rates at its next meeting, you could go right ahead and buy as much yen as you like. No one will ever prosecute you for insider trading should your bet pay off. There is no such thing as insider trading in FX; in fact, European economic data, such as German employment figures, are often leaked days before they are officially released.

Which currencies are Traded?

Although some retail dealers trade exotic currencies such as the Thai baht or the Czech koruna, the majority trade the seven most liquid currency pairs in the world, which are the four majors:

EUR/USD (euro/dollar) USD/JPY (dollar/Japanese yen) GBP/USD (British pound/dollar) USD/CHF (dollar/Swiss franc)

and the three commodity pairs:

AUD/USD (Australian dollar/dollar) USD/CAD (dollar/Canadian dollar) NZD/USD (New Zealand dollar/dollar)

These currency pairs, along with their various combinations (such as EUR/JPY, GBP/JPY and EUR/GBP) account for more than 95% of all speculative trading in FX. Given the small number of trading instruments - only 18 pairs and crosses are actively traded - the FX market is far more concentrated than the stock market.
